

to dream a dream

'creation, the birth of a dream into the beauty of the divinity of who i am. i am a spark of the stars, the pure divine, who have descended into this new love of life, within life, to express my individuality, my uniqueness as my pure self. i came here to express my pain, to express my joy and to express my passions that i dare to express them. to dream a dream. to become an expression of the divine self and a mirror to those who can see me, through our eyes and into the depths of my solitude. i sit here now as i reveal my dreams freely, without worry of judgment and with the realization, that is a part of my dream as well. i am here to show the world that true magick exists, as i have seen it, experienced it and as i embody it. i dream of this magick every day and it manifests in all, all around me as i live within the truth of my authenticity. each day creates opportunity of expression of this dream and magick to unfold within and as it does, it is mirrored without, in the world around me. allow me to become a reflection of your magick. allow my dream to create in cooperation, with the dreams you have left dormant for so so long in the depths of your fear and all that is out of alignment. allow your inner child to rise and bask in the light of love, once again. allow this love to manifest within the beauty of your divine self. my dream is a blueprint, a map and the breadcrumbs i left myself to show me the way back home. the more i create, the more expansive the dream becomes within this reality of mine. hold my hand and let us create some magick together within this dream of dreams, as dreamers are the ones who build worlds of divinity. let us build this new reality together, within the consciousness of the self, together, and the collective alike. let us leave legacy to the children of this world, our children, our child. for the children who are waiting with the stars, waiting to come visit the world we are rebuilding anew. come, create, build something new and magickal with me.'

Chapter 3

To Dream

Become a dreamer, as the dreamers are the ones who build worlds. Become a dreamer of this world and have the eyes to see the truth beyond the veil and that the reality around you, is just a mirror of your individual consciousness in combination with the collective, collectively. To become aware that god is the dreamer of this dream and that you are playing a part as an aspect of that same divine essence. Once you wake up and see the world for what it truly is, you wake up within the dream and realize that you have the ability to create whatever you want within the divine aspect of who you are. Whatever you create within the truest aspect of your deepest self, will be reflected to the divine world around you, the mirror of who you are, as your true self.

Jesus and Mary Magdalene discovered the truth of their divinity and they became the seekers of divine sacred knowledge and wanted to share that to the world around them. They wanted to share the truth to those who wanted to share within this dream with them. To show the world that true magick exists within the miracles that are created in the faith and knowing of who they were. They walked the path of their destiny knowing where it would eventually lead and walked it anyway. They walked the dream knowing the impact they would create would ripple though the waters of time, and flow into the destiny of their soul path that they followed it. They walked through the sands of time and left footprints that would never fade from the crashing waves that usually take them to the depths of the waters below. They opened the door and moved heaven onto the earth that laid below, at their feet.

They wanted to create more dreamers within the world around them, not those who would follow them and their dreams, but to create leaders who would create their own, in divine union with themselves and all of creation. The dreams of those who would recognize themselves as the sons and daughters of god that can shine brightly through the dense forests, and ground the light of their divinity upon the sacred earth we all tread upon. To spread the love of the universal heart that we all hold true and dear to our living selves.

To dream a world where people could see the wounds of themselves and their ancestors, as they are, and shed them from the darkness of their energetic selves, to release them into the waters that cleanse their bodies and freed their souls. A dream where the soul reemerges to life as we let go of control of our lives and give in to our divinity. To dream in the present moment and not plan for tomorrow, as we do not know what magick tomorrow holds as we release the ego and give in to the flow of our divine selves. To dream of our passions as our passions will drive the magick deeper into our earthly selves. To dream of creation as creation is what we are here to experience, within divine love.

Have you ever had a dream where you became consciously aware that you were asleep within that dream. To wake up within it and knowing you had full control of what you wanted to do and create within that dream. That is a magickal experience within itself as it give you a simplistic perspective on the levels of consciousness that we all have within us. Our sleeping dreams show us the deepest aspects of truth within our subconscious mind if we take the time to feel into their meanings and interpretations. Sometimes our physical mind cannot comprehend them but I found that if you take the time to feel into them and meditate when you wake up, the knowledge can be found in the feelings you have experienced within them.

I found the same to be true within this dream we are now experiencing, together. Together we create a world of what we want to see individually and collectively. Within this new age of Aquarius, as we awaken to our new truth within ascension, of the selves and as a whole. We raise in vibration and as we do, we start to slowly notice that our dreams and visions for ourselves shift and change and come more into alignment with universal truth and love. Though it may not be an easy process for our energetic bodies to shed the old, but trust in your divinity, that the love of the new self will awaken and see more purpose of the soul that will emerge in this dream.

The dreams of the children of this world are the closest to the divine aspects of true creation within it. The pure hearts and souls of children who are unburdened with traumas and biased belief systems are those who can really shape the reality they live in. Imaginary play is a powerful form of creation in the world they live in. It becomes their reality and just as much real to them, in those moments, when they truly believe in what they are creating. These are the true dreamers of this world, the children who brought this level of creation into their adult life. The children that never left themselves behind as they grew with the world around them. This has become a goal for rest of us. A goal to bring that level of creation back into the now moments, that we live in today.

As we heal our inner child and bring them home to the reality we live, we start to elevate to that aspect of divinity once again and become closer to the home we are all searching for. Through the gift of the darkness we experience, we get a chance to shed those nightmares and create the dream we know within ourselves that exists in our deepest depths. This darkness is not out there in the world around you, but the reality of within, that we need to search with inner retrospection and deep feeling. Feeling our way through the darkness is where we can find and help our inner child come home to where they finally belong, by your side and holding your hand with love, care and compassion.

The inner child is one of the keys that can unlock creation, as they know how to create without judgment or boundaries. They do not know impossibility and create from a place that all is possible. They create before parental and societal belief systems are introduced into the nervous systems and ego mind patterning. That is the absolute truth within this reality. Magick does truly exist and all is possible, with enough belief, faith and trust. Only those who are bound by the beliefs of others are bound to the possibilities that exist in this world. Those who push the boundaries of their dreams, create new boundaries for not only themselves, but the collective as a whole. That is where true creation within the dreamer is born, without limits, with childlike curiosity.

To dream a dream and follow your passions within the creation of that dream is one of the most adventurous journeys one can take. To follow your passions not only to help others, but to help yourself grow and evolve. With each word I type, I tap into the universal knowledge of the collective consciousness and beyond. As I connect to this ancient knowledge and channel it into the works before me, I create something that is unique to me and my expression of it. This dream of mine is brought through this creation, not only of my own undertaking, but a creation of what parts of our collective dream needs at this moment. It brings purpose and meaning to my dream, as it will help and inspire another to find their purpose and meaning through their journey and eventually create their own unique expression their own works of art.

Art is the expression of one's dreams within the dream of the dreamer. The art is an expression of them as they are in that moment. A reflection of their divinity, in whatever state that may be. All emotion is a gift of creation and all art, within that expression of emotion, is beauty to the creation of all the collective. All forms of art, even those expressed with pain, is still beauty within this dream we all live in. As we create, through our pain, we heal, not only ourselves but the world as a whole. Through our healing is where our true divine selves are born.

Sometimes our dreams, are of soul creation and are meant for life to not just exist, but to discover what is possible. I don't personally believe the traumas we experience in life are lessons, as that word does not resonate with me personally, but I feel that our soul chooses certain dreams for growth and expansion, within these expressions and experiences. Though the pain of the traumas we go through in life, it can give birth to the dreams of our soul in this reality we have created in the aftermath. We evolve and expand the love we can hold with the pain of the past and create the dream of the healers journey along the way.

The healers journey is a dream of expansion and growth that we can experience depending on our souls destined path and the free choices we can make within our divine selves. No matter what choices you make in life there will always be expansion within the life we live. This is why many of us choose to come here and experience that pain, for the journey and healing that is possible through that path. Consider life to be a pendulum with one extreme at one end of the other. The swing we experience through the pain and the sorrow will be equal to the level of love we can experience on the other side of it.

Jesus knew he was going to be crucified and he walked that destined path anyway. He knew the reality of this place, as a dream, and he understood more with his level of awareness within the collective consciousness. He knew he would experience the pain but knew the story he was destined to create with that journey of death and resurrection. He knew his path to show the world that magick and wonder exist and wanted to show everyone truth, what each and every one of us is capable of creating in this dream. He was a dreamer of hearts, sacred within the heart of connection with the divine Mary Magdalene at his side.

Consciousness is the dream. Energy and vibration make up this world and the universe around you, including you. All around you is within you, but you see the mirror of your truth around you. You are a reflection of god, looking in the mirror back at yourself, staring into the depths of the eyes of your own divinity. You can either get lost or find your way back home within this reflection. Both are swings of the pendulum and neither is wrong, but always the right path as we live our experiences in our own way. Though you may find yourself getting lost in this dream, trust that you left yourself breadcrumbs to find you way back home.
